pomegranate flowers, and peonies were embroidered on the ensembles with Aari thread work and Nakshi Pata methods. Rawal's work embodied an androgynous spirit, weaving together silks, brocades, and ikkat. The backdrop of blooming forests, statement accessories, such as a silver hardcover bag adorned with jasmine flowers, ear cuffs, and boots, perfectly captured the theme. Jajodia channelled the romantic aspect of nature into her collection. The designs, inspired by French architecture, were a modern take on bridal couture. Dolly J's haute couture collection, La Vie En Rose, put on display an array of shimmering fabrics, including iridescent tissues, tulle, and silk organza. Each piece was delicately enhanced with lace and floral motifs, transporting viewers to a fairytale ambience.

AN EXTENSION OF THE BODY

Tarun Tahiliani, Rimzim Dadu, and Abu Jani and Sandeep Khosla blurred the lines between the garment and human identity. For Tahiliani, creating couture that feels comfortable on skin is crucial. The intricately draped saris, structured bodices, risqué yet elegant bodysuits, were truly 'otherworldly'. The incorporation of crafts, like Kashidakari and Mukaish, defined the soul of the collection.

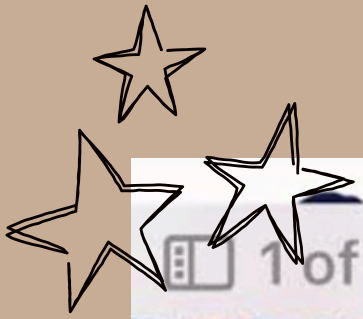

Dadu's designs were a tactile experience, where the richly detailed garment—in her signature metallic yarn and steel wires—did not overshadow the wearer's natural form. The innovative styling with bejewelled stockings, fringe footwear, and bespoke bags contributed to the appeal.

Abu Jani and Sandeep Khosla aimed literally for the stars with resham embroidery and mirror work in their collection.

Shirts, ties and suiting are not solely reserved for the office anymore. In Taipei, traditional formalwear was turned on its head through 'gothified' means. In a series of primarily black looks, an overabundance of accessories could be seen, from chain necklaces and bulky platforms to handmade embellishments adorning personalised layers. Corsets and belts added to the overall aesthetic,

Layering bottoms has become a staple in the streets of global fashion weeks, and the same could continue to be said for Taipei, where trousers on trousers captured the hearts of show audiences. Variations of this style were expansive, however. While some opted for double denim, the top layer appearing more distressed to add depth, others combined styles, mixing and

Despite the humidity of Taipei's urban jungle, attendees never strayed from the use of accessories. One that seemed to remain imperative to bringing an outfit together was that of a small, alas statement-making, scarf. Whether worn as a frilly bow or flung over the shoulder, many leaned into the subtle drama such an item could present.
